NEW ZEALAND.
An Inhabitant of New Zealand Tells Something of That Country and Its Laws.

"I am partial to New Zealand," said Mr. George Leighton of Dunedin, New Zealand. "It is because I have lived there all my life, and am deeply attached to the island," says the Washington Post. "In my humble opinion there is no better country on earth. It is progressive in advance of any other government. Nowhere else in the world is labor treated so well; no where else is there such a regard for the welfare of the people. Some might object that our system is too paternal, but the results show for themselves. There is no pauperism and scarcely any crime. A tramp is an unknown thing in New Zealand. The working days; no employer can work his help over 48 hours a week. The minimum wage is $2 a day for men. Our labor unions are very strong and the laws for the protection of labor are stringently enforced."

"At the age of 65 every man and woman who has lived in New Zealand 25 years is entitled to a pension of seven shillings and sixpence a week, if they have not accumulated any wealth. We have a land tax and an income tax, and there is no getting around the payment. If a man is returning his property for taxation, puts it at a value below the real worth, the government notifies him that it will buy at the figure he has rendered. This is an infallible check against swearing off ones taxes."

"I am a commercial traveler and go good many thousand miles over the colony in the course of a year. My transportation for that period costs me 50 pound sterling which is not quite $5 a week, and there is no limit of the number of miles I may ride. If I choose to transfer my ticket there is a charge of $25. In other words I can ride a whole week in New Zealand for the cost of transportation from New York to Washington. Our railroads are owned and operated by the government—Freedom."
